Construction Specialties Acrovyn is Chefs special at Ryde TAFE's new culinary institute

While Gordon Ramsey's Hell's Kitchen incites budding chefs to shrink away in fear, the culinary connoisseurs at Ryde TAFE, Sydney, are reaching for their whisks and spatulas in droves with the opening of the $10million Culinary Arts Institute.

A three year long project that involved cutting-edge Architects Suters Architects', the new four level training venue boasts nine new kitchens, two service delivery stores, three practice dining rooms and a new cafeteria.

"This area is a chef's dream, with a focus on complete functionality while creating a modern, slick aesthetic which enhances every aspect of the training experience," said Shane Wood, Senior Associate of Suters Architects.

"You don't need to watch MasterChef to know the amount of rough and tumble that goes on in commercial kitchens, so using robust, long lasting materials that need minimal maintenance was also priority," Shane said.

Stepping up to the plate with just the robust solution needed to protect the venues walls and internal lining from damage was Construction Specialties Acrovyn hand rails, crash rails and corner guards.

"We chose Acrovyn because we know it's long lasting because of its material composition and long term guarantee and the product could be easily customised to achieve our unique, smart, contemporary look," Shane said.

In total, more than 100 square metres of product was used on the project, combining sophisticated shape, functionality and strength that harnesses the versatility of acrylics, the warmth of timber, and the strength of stainless steel.

The striking Danube Blue was selected from a large colour palette to go with the cool blue tones of the inside walls, complimenting the stylish simplicity of this commercial kitchen.

Bill Maloukis, Construction Specialties General Manager said he saw this project as testament to the capability of Acrovyn.

"I'm really proud of Acrovyn, which is a tribute to form and function. It is a supremely versatile product which can be applied in so many different commercial settings from kitchens to hospitals, because its durability is uncompromising while its design can be tailored to different aesthetic approaches," Bill said.
